Condition of Borthern Crops.

Bush, NGTON, Iowa, July 3.—Special dispatches to the Hawkeye, of Saturday morning, from about one hundred points in southwestern lowa, western Illinois and northern Missouri, regarding the growing crops, give a very fair index of their present condition in this section of the west. Winter wheat has suffered in places from winter killing, dry weather, chiniz bug and rust. These causes vary in different localities and are by no means uniform, and an and rust. These causes vary in different lo-calities and are by no means uniform, and an average yield will be fair on account of the increased acreage. It grows luxuriant and remarkably even, and has generally been well cultivated and is in excellent condition. The yield promises to be immense. The hay crop is deficient.

STANTINOPLE, July 2. - The news which has reached the government concerning the International conference has produced great astonishment and indignation in official circles here and among the upper ranks of Musselmen. grand missions of our party is to banish forever from American politics that deplorable spirit of sectional hatred which has, for base purposes, been fostered by the leaders of the old parties. This has greatly deceived and embittered the public mind both north and touth. Our civilization demands a new party, dedicated to pursuits of peace, and which will not allow war issues ever to be reopened, and will render the military strictly subservient to the civil power. The war is over, and the sweet voice of Peace, so long neglected, calls us to worship at her altars. Let us crown her temples with willing votaries. Let us have a free ballot, a fair count, and equal rights for all classes—for the laboring men in the northeral manufactories, mines and workshops, and for the struggling poor, both black and white, in the cotton fields of the south. I most earnestly and solemnly invoke the united action of all industrial classes, irrespective of party, that we may make a manifestive of party, the proper to research of the public opinion of the press, bar and pulpit, being mainly under the control of the enemies of our movement, the convention has thought it proper to request its candidates to visit the various sections of the Union and talk to the people. Land for Settlers. CHICAGO, July 2.—General J. B. the bonds the banks must cease to exist; hence, if the national banks are to continue, we must have a perpetual bonded debt. Both patriotism and sound statesmanship loudly call for the abolition of banks of issue and the substitution of legal-tender treasury notes for their circulation. Pay the bonds according to contract, as rapidly as possible. Seven hundred million dollars of the public debt becomes redesmable at the option of the government during this and the ensuing year. Two funding bills are new pending before congress, one introduced by a Democratic, and the other by a Republican leader of the house, whereby it is proposed to deprive the people for twenty and thirty years of the lawful right to pay said bonds. This is a crime against the laborer and taxpayer, and should cause widespread alarm among all classes. CLRYZLAND, July 2.—Niedhammer, shot near Brighton last evening, is still alive, but is not expected to recover. His assailant was arrested, and gives his name as Frederick must be transparent to all that great monied ustitutions and other corporations now have control of pearly every department of the government, and are fast swallowing up the profits of labor and reducing the people to a condition of of vassatage and dependence. These monopulies, of whatever class, headed by associated banks, are interlocked in purpose and always act in the closest sympathy. There are three great industrial classes in America. First, the producers; second, those who manufacture our raw matisfyles and prepare them for use; third, distributors of these products. Each should be protected in the legitimate fruits and profits of their labor, but should not be permitted to extort from and enslave the others. The great problem of our civilization is how to bring producer and consumer together. This can only be done by providing an adequate circulating medium and by a rigid regulation of interstate commerce and transportation. This was wisely foreseen by the framers of the constitution, and accordingly by the eighth section of article one: "Congress is clothed with power to regulate commerce with foreign powers and among the States." This power imposes a corresponding duty upon congress to see that it is enforced. The two great agents of commerce Killed Her Three Children. CONSTATINOPLE, July 3.—It is currently reported that orders have been given for the mobilization of the Second army corps. The Porte, in its reply in regard to the Montenegrin question, says that in view of the responding duty upon congress to see that it is enforced. The two great agents of commerce are money and transportation. It is understood that both of these agents are under the absothe volume of money, the banks fix the price of all labor and property; and railroads, by combination, render competition impossible, and control absolutely the price of transportation. LATER.

The Americans were again successful in shooting in the Abercorn competition at Dollymount, which was finished to day. Though two of the Americans made the highest scores they could not win the cup, the competition for which was confined to Irishmen qualified to represent Ireland in the match for the Eicho shield. The Americans, however, won the highest money prizes. The weather was unfavorable; the wind was variable and gusty. Twenty shots each were again allowed at 1000 yards range, making the total number of shots fixed by each man at all ranges in both days 100.

The following are the scores made at 1000 yards: Jackson, 94; Feston, 84; Brown, 88; Warren, 84; Scott, 83; Young, 83; Milner, 89; Farrow, 78; John Rigby, 79; Thynne, 91; Joynt, 70; Rockwell, 83; Fisher, 68.

The following are the scores at all ranges for the two days shooting: Jackson, 464; Scott, 461; Fenton, 458; Young, 458; Brown, 451; Milner, 450; Warren, 447; Farrow, 444; John Rigby, 444; Wm. Rigby, 441; Laird, 441; Thynne, 439; Joynt, 438; Rockwell, 432; Fisher, 424.

All the above named gentlemen took prizes. Fenton made the highest score of the trishmen, but was not allowed to take the cup, having been a winner of it on a previous occasion. Young, therefore, is the winner of the cup.

The All Ireland challenge shield will be
